Department Mission

Courses taught in the Department of Philosophy and Theology stress the Catholic and Franciscan character of the university, encapsulated in five Franciscan values: 1) reverence the unique dignity of each person; 2) encourage a trustful, affirming community through Eucharist, prayer, and Gospel living; 3) serve with joy one another, society, and the Church; 4) foster peace and justice on all levels; and 5) respect creation and use resources wisely.

Several important dimensions of the Franciscan tradition are embraced by the faculty of the Department of Philosophy and Theology. The first of these is the goodness of God which flows into all of God's creation. This life-giving "good news" repudiates the culture of death in which we live in our modern world. Second, we believe that we joyfully meet Jesus Christ in each person, and seek God's goodness in every enquiring mind. Third, we strive to infuse all that we do, both inside and outside the classroom, with the love of Jesus Christ, rooted in his living presence in the Eucharist. In the spirit of Saints Francis and Clare, students meet this living presence of Jesus, who is the origin, the way and the goal that forms and fulfills one's mind, heart and entire life. Fourth, we emphasize two ideas that defined the life of Saint Francis: the humility of Christ's Incarnation and the charity of his Passion. Fifth, we believe that Franciscan ideals speak to people from all walks of life and all religious persuasions, inviting all to a life of service, joy and wonder. Finally, we encourage all people to consider the specific contribution of the Catholic faith to questions about the meaning and purpose of life and the nature of ultimate reality.

In light of the foregoing, the Department of Philosophy and Theology is committed to the philosophical and theological enrichment of students and faculty and to being a resource for the Fort Wayne community. Specifically, its courses and programs are designed to: 1) explore the Catholic and Franciscan theological tradition; 2) foster interfaith dialogue and understanding; 3) promote solid scholarship, critical thinking and the development of interpersonal skills; 4) encourage personal faith development; and 5) provide a solid theoretical basis and effective practical experience for all who seek to serve others.
